The chaos

I think everybody heard about the chaos theory, or about the butterfly effect, but most of the people don't accord any importance to it, because they think that their life is organized and regular.

The opposite of this I'll try to demonstrate, not on sophisticated physical systems, but on the systems of our everyday life.

The chaos theory is available for the dynamic systems and studies these, but because there is the relativity theory, the static systems are in a relative stability, so the chaos theory is available for them also and it's no use if they lock themselves in stable conditions.

There was once a man(not me!), who was very afraid of lightning, so every time when storm approached, he locked on himself in a stable system. It was his bed in his room, where he laid like a dead zombie(he knew that any little movement, may cause a bolt) until the storm passed.
